I. LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD

The Labour Relations Board came into existence in 1944 with passage of The Trade Union Act, S. S. 1944 (2nd Sess.) c. 69. Although the Act was amended in subsequent years, the basic concept of the board has not changed. Then, as now, the board is an independent, quasi-judicial tribunal charged with the responsibility of adjudicating disputes that arise under The Trade Union Act. It does this principally through public hearings and its written decisions. The board's decisions are final and binding upon the parties. There is no appeal, and review by the courts is strictly limited.

The Act presently provides for a board composed of five members, and an unspecified number of alternate members. All members and alternate members of the board are appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. The Chairman and Vice-Chairman are full-time members of the board. The remaining members and alternate members are not employees of the board. They are appointed and paid on a per diem basis when their services are required. The board is a representational board. This means all members of the board, with the exception of the Chairman, are representatives of employees or employers. The Chairman is neutral and, with only one exception, has always been a lawyer.

The board reports to the Minister of Human Resources, Labour and Employment. The Minister is obligated by The Trade Union Act to provide the board with the requisite staff and facilities. Otherwise, the board operates independently from the government, its departments and agencies.

The board's offices and staff are located in Regina, although the board maintains a hearing room in Saskatoon. The staff of the board is composed of the Executive Officer (the duties of which have been assumed by the Vice-Chairman), the board secretary and three clerical positions. An Organizational Chart of the Labour Relations Board is contained in Table I.

II. The Trade Union Act

In Canada, legislative jurisdiction over industrial relations has, since a ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada in 1925, fallen largely under provincial jurisdiction. Fortunately the potential this presented for legal fragmentation was offset by varying combinations of interprovincial management and union structures, common history and common day-to-day economic and political conditions. The result is a remarkable commonality of core principles and procedures in all 11 Canadian jurisdictions.

The main features of The Trade Union Act, like its counterparts in all other Canadian jurisdictions, are that:

- (a) the traditional courts are replaced by a specialized, quasi-judicial tribunal with exclusive and binding jurisdiction over the matters assigned to it by The Trade Union Act;
- (b) the law of conspiracy and restraint of trade, is abolished insofar as it applies to employees who bargain collectively;
- (c) the majority of employees determine for all employees in the unit, whether they will bargain collectively and, if so, through which union;
- (d) an employer is required to recognize the union chosen by the majority of its employees as their exclusive representative for the purpose of bargaining collectively;
- (e) the employer and the union are required to bargain in good faith with a view to concluding a collective bargaining agreement;
- (f) a number of unfair labour practices are created to protect employees and unions from any attempt by the employer to interfere with their rights;
- (g) strike and lock-out activity is regulated, but not prohibited;
- (h) specific issues, such as union security, technological change, conciliation, voting procedures, and religious exclusions, are addressed; and
- (i) remedial and enforcement procedures are specified.

In short, the Act provides the legal framework for collective bargaining, along with a procedure for adjudicating disputes and enforcing rights and obligations. The Trade Union Act, like its counterparts in all other Canadian jurisdictions, does not attempt to prohibit economic conflict between employees and employers, but only to control it. It does not attempt to regulate the outcome of collective bargaining, but merely the process to be followed. Occasionally, the Legislature will remove a particular term or condition of employment from the bargaining table and award it to one side or the other. However, the final arbiter of the employees' terms and conditions of employment is mainly the marketplace.
